UM PRESIDENT'S LECTURE TO FOCUS ON CRISIS IN SCHOLARLY COMMUNICATION MISSOULA --

Richard Dougherty, a University of Michigan professor of information and library studies, will discuss "The Crisis in Scholarly Communication: Has the Vehicle Lost a Wheel?" Tuesday, Feb. 12, at The University of Montana.

His free, public lecture -- the fifth in UM's 1990-91 President's Lecture Series -- will be at 8 p.m. in the Montana Theatre.

Dougherty, president of the American Library Association, directed The University of Michigan's University Library for 10 years. He's also headed the acquisitions department at the University of North Carolina, been the associate director of libraries at the University of Colorado and served as university librarian at the University of California at Berkeley.

Author of the books "Scientific Management of Library Operations" and "Improving Access to Library Resources," Dougherty edited the journal College and Research Libraries for five years. In 1975 he launched the Journal of Academic Librarianship, which he continues to edit. He also edits Library Issues: Briefings for Faculty and Administrators.

In 1983, the Association of College and Research Libraries chose
